Garden Industries Enters the Shipping Market

Due to Numerous Requests, the Award-Winning Nursery has Developed a Shipping Program

Loxahatchee, FL: Garden Industries of Loxahatchee, Florida, known for the quality and unusual variety of material they produce, has entered the shipping market just in time for Spring. The award-winning nursery is fast becoming established as a leader in the production of quality plants, with a focus on rare, uncommon, unusual or heirloom varieties. This includes a large selection of succulents, pollinator plants, patio trees, flowering material, topiaries and aroids. David Bache, Sales Director of Garden Industries explains, "While it was not our original intention to enter the shipping market, the demand from around the world for our plants has been a revelation. It just makes sense to work with clients who appreciate what we do and what we grow." Reaction from the industry is strong. Says BJ Knapp, owner of BJ's Quality Tropical Plants of Delray Beach, Florida, "ALERT THE MEDIA. Botanical Gardens and other horticulturally conscious quality buyers.... Be ready to be amazed! One of my favorites...the unique "Botanical Grade" is about to be back in queue with the long-awaited entrance of Garden Industries onto the wholesale shippers list, Woo Hoo!" Casey Sherwood of Newton Nurseries in Houston agrees. The Texas-based garden center buyer expressed, "I'm so happy that you are finally shipping. Now we can finally obtain some of the hard-to-find plant material that only you grow, along with your high-quality shrubs, trees, and perennials. I'm sure everyone in our industry is glad to have you back and supplied with plants." Garden Industries will focus on independent retail garden centers, botanical gardens, and zoos, shipping on reputable commercial carriers.

Long recognized as a leader in the industry, Phil Cialone of Outrageous Tropicals in Palm City, Florida summarized things, by saying he "is excited about the fact that Garden industries will be shipping plants real soon. They grow excellent quality, wide variety, of very cool plants., They will be my go-to source. David Bache has done an excellent job in a very short time."
